

Tom Scholberg
Epilepsy Ottawa-Carleton (EOC)

After graduating with a degree in psychology, Tom has spent his entire career to date working in the social services, primarily with at-risk youth. He spent many years working as a street outreach worker, counselling sex-trade workers and intravenous drug addicts. As a youth/family counsellor, he developed comprehensive strategies to deal with anger/violence in individuals and later, in communities. Presently, Tom works with young persons directly in conflict with the law. His professional interests range from developing evidence-based programming to policy development.

Tom is a father of two young boys, and spends most of his time building Lego structures with them, some of which even last more than a few hours.
